LETTER FROM THE PUBLISHER

Thank you to everyone who believed, supported and worked so hard to help build, shape and create this publication. Txhawb would not exist without the efforts, talent and support of so many people. Thank you to all the advertisers for your support. Please support their businesses so we can continue to build Txhawb in the future.

If your family or business lacks communication, your family will not be a strong unit. My vision for Txhawb is to build an improved system of communication for business and social networking. I want to build a platform or forum where we can share stories of courage and triumph; to preserve, celebrate and remember our traditions and our past but also to exchange ideas, resources and information to help shape the future.

It is often said that from your deepest hardship you will grow the most and discover your greatest strength within. Of all the events in 2007 that have impacted the Hmong community, I feel nothing cut deeper than the alleged conspiracy of General Vang Pao and others to overthrow the Laotian government. Though many were saddened and heartbroken by this event, it seemed for the time first ever, our Hmong communities, often divided by income, education, religion, lifestyles or even clan associations, came together for the first time. This event, as tragic and painful as it was to endure, brought many in our community together under common obligations: to define the meaning of being Hmong, to defend our history and our culture, and to remind another generation of our children the meaning of being Hmong and the sacrifices and endeavors that our elders have faced in order to afford them the opportunities in America today. For the first time elders gathered to protest, students rallied at Universities across America, musicians wrote and sang inspiring songs of tribute, artists painted reminiscent portraits of our heritage and created videos to remind us all of the collective journey we all took as refugees wandering and longing for a home. Under the shadows of so much dark media coverage, it brought out the best and brightest from within our community. This incident reminded everyone we were Hmong.

A culture has the power to define who you are as people, but as a people, we also hold the ability to define our culture and how it will be shaped in the future. With this in mind, I hope we all find renewed inspiration for ourselves so each of us can contribute a unique piece of ourselves to build a better tomorrow. Don't let others define who you are, or what it means to be Hmong; be courageous, informed, and enlightened. Let your actions define you... I hope you enjoy this publication.

MANY PEOPLE FREQUENTLY TALK ABOUT PROMOTING CHANGE IN THE WORLD, BUT RARELY DO THEY EVER TAKE ACTION. FOR ONE YOUNG HMONG WOMAN, ACTION WAS HER ANSWER.

As a resident of Tulare and senior at Tulare Union High School, Pang Zao Khang was crowned Miss Hmong California at last year's Sacramento Hmong New Year when she was sixteen years old.

Pang exudes youthful elegance. She speaks with a maturity beyond her years, is polite and attentive yet sociable. And now, at seventeen years-old, she has an inspiring story to tell.

At such a young age, many people doubted her ability to effectively capitalize on her title as Miss Hmong California, and make a positive change in the Hmong community. She received harsh comments, such as "you're too young," "you'll use up the prize money on yourself," or "you won't keep your words."

Pang says the discouraging comments gave her "more motivation" and propelled her desire to prove them wrong. Instead of talking, she took action on a pressing issue. In the process, she experienced a life changing event that took her across the globe back to where she was born, Thailand.

On August the 14 and 15, 2007, Miss Hmong California, Paj Zaub Khab visited Pheatchbun (Dej Dawb) and saw the living conditions of our hmong refugees in the refugee camp.

This is her story...

WORLDS APART

Story By Mai Der Vang

VISIT TO DEJ DAWB

"I have always wanted to make a connection with our people," Pang says, "and I heard there were people suffering in Dej Dawb (Thailand), they are our Hmong refugees."

Pang's desire to reach out to these refugees launched a nearly year-long effort to raise money to go to Dej Dawb, to meet the refugees and deliver much needed items, such as clothing, shoes, and blankets.

With the help of May Ying Ly from the Hmong Women's Heritage organization in Sacramento and her mother, May Xiong and father, Sia Khang, Pang raised money to fund her trip, in addition to $3,000 to purchase supplies. "Time flies," she says, "we planned this trip shortly after I was crowned Miss Hmong California, and a few months after, we planned the fundraising party and arranged everything, then it was already August and time to go to Thailand."

"Dej Dawb", also called Huy Nam Khao camp, is located in Phetchabun Province. Over 4,500 Hmong left Laos in 2005 and headed for the camp, many of whom came to escape human rights violations by the Laotian government after decades of hiding in the Lao jungles following the Vietnam War.

That same year, the last Thai refugee camp, Wat Tham Krabok, shut down operation after the State Department accepted over 15,000 refugees to resettle in the United States. Those who did not make the cut to come to America, close to 2,000, also headed for Dej Dawb.

For several months, many of these Hmong were living along the roadsides of Huy Nam Khao, without access to food, shelter or medical care. Many non-governmental and humanitarian organizations were and are still being denied access to assist these Hmong. The Thai government has declared them "illegal immigrants" instead of recognizing them as "refugees", which prevents them from receiving services and international aide.

Today, the situation has grown dire. The population has risen to 8,000, and poverty continues to plague the camp. The Thai government is contemplating sending all 8,000 back to Laos by the end of 2007, even at the risk of international criticism. Many of the camp's residents fear they will die or be tortured in Laos if repatriated. Pang and her group did not provide advance notice to Thai officials to inform of their visit. But they worked so hard, there was no turning back. The trip had to be done, even if they were denied admission into the camp. Luckily, they were allowed to enter because of Pang's official title as Miss Hmong California. She was accompanied by her mother and May Ying Ly.

"You hear they are suffering, but you don't know how bad it is until you see it," says Pang.

"What really got me were the barbed wire fences, they are locked in, they are treated like animals, they are humans too. The soldiers guard them, but they don't talk to them nicely, they just yell."

The children also made an impact. She had brought school supplies and candy for them, but it was an emotional encounter for Pang. "I saw some kids without clothes, some with shoes, some without... the kids all came out to see me, they're kids, many don't know what's going on, I got really emotional, so they looked at me like I was crazy."

Families are assigned to live in small shack houses, often times two to three family per house, "it's very small, not enough for them to sleep in, when the kids play, they all go outside in groups to play."

Poor working conditions add to the stress of poverty. "Some of the refugees come out to work," says Pang, "and when they come out, they form a line, and if they are working and stop, they get yelled at." The jobs entail laying cement and cutting bamboo to build houses.

Many of the Hmong live in fear of being sent back to Laos. "If they get sent back, they'll be tortured," she shares, "so no one wants to go back... they say if that happened, they would rather commit suicide."

"They are Hmong and we are Hmong too, I love them a lot, I see them suffer," says Pang.

Even though Pang stayed at the camp for only two days, she knows the experience will have a long-term impact on her life. It has already begun to deepen her understanding of many things.

"I started to understand why [my parents] push me so much in school, they yell at you because they love you...they suffered a lot to get you where you are at," she says.

Pang arrived to the US in 1994, from Thailand, when she was four years old. Her family was initially resettled in Modesto but they moved to Tulare shortly after.

Going back to Thailand gave her a glimpse of the life her parents and elders once lived. "My parents came from there, my grandparents came from there, and I came from there too; they told me about all the suffering that was happening there."

Pang's memory of Thailand is sparse. But her mother told her that when she, Pang, was little, she was one of those children too, running around with the few clothes she had and no shoes.

"It makes me appreciate what I have in the US, and motivates me to keep up my education," she shares, "one way our Hmong people can help [the refugees] is through education and knowledge, if you have that education, you know what's going on in the world, you know how to find a way to help."

Through education, you can "be somebody so those people, those soldiers and guards know who you are, they'll listen to you, the government will be more careful if they know you are educated because you know the laws."

The difference in environment helped Pang realize not to take things for granted. For example, "over there, it's so hard to find a trash can...yet you don't see trash lying on the floor, here in the US, there are many trash cans...yet people litter all over the streets." Food portions are smaller, half of what people typically consume in this country.

"They live with many hardships, and [those of us] who have been raised here, we are here because our parents suffered through those hardships once," Pang shares.

INSPIRE A NEW GENERATION

Since August, Pang has shared her experienced with others. She has been featured on several Hmong radio shows across the country, and has committed herself to continuing to educate others and create awareness around this issue.

For the future, she sees herself moving forward with her education to study Political Science, and work with the community. "I am going to continue to college and get a degree and help out our people as much as I can."

Winning the pageant at a young age has encompassed one aspect of her life. But using her title to advance a community effort to promote change across the world has launched this young Hmong woman to a new platform. She has always felt a connection to the Hmong culture and community, but by winning Miss Hmong California and going to Thailand, she learned, saw, and experienced many new things, all of which have strengthened her outlook on life.

Growing up, she was inspired by previous pageant winners. "I thought one day, I wanted to do that too, they set an example for younger girls to look up to, and they set an example for me." And now, just by her actions, Pang has set an example for others to follow.

Perhaps an ongoing tradition will develop from her work, that whoever receives the next crown as Miss Hmong California will also act in a similar capacity as Pang, and continue this "humanitarian tour" around the world.

"I encourage young ladies, whether or not they participate in the pageant, to...do something and give back to their community," Pang says, "if you win or not, it doesn't mean you can't do anything."

For all Hmong youth, "take advantage and appreciate what you have in the US." Going to Thailand, Pang saw what many children lack and want desperately, an opportunity to go to school and be educated.

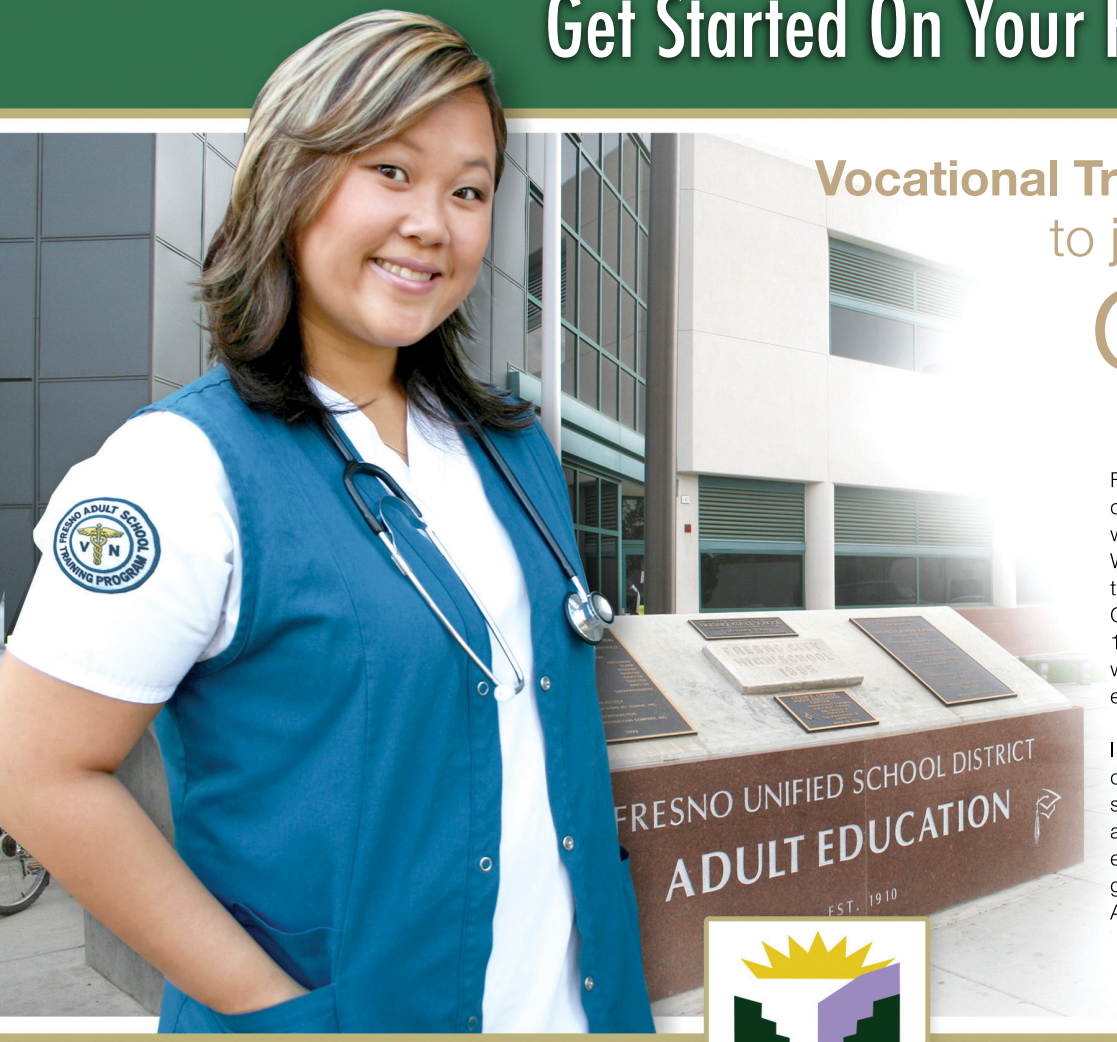

"Stay in school," she says, "your education is important to help you and your family, your whole Hmong community, and everyone else...appreciate what you have, love your elders, respect them...they suffered so you could one day have a good life."

No one knows for sure what will happen next to these 8,000 residents of Dej Dawb, but Hmong in America should keep watch on the issue, stay informed.

Even though people told Pang she would never make it to Dej Dawb, she charged forward and proved them wrong. She went to Thailand to help these Hmong, to do the little she could to change their situation. But in the end, they helped her, and changed her life for the better.

It goes to show, anyone has the power to make a difference, no matter if you live in the land of opportunity, or behind the barbed wire fence of a makeshift refugee camp.

I am currently taking some prerequisites classes for the RN program which I will be starting next summer. My goals are to pursue a career as a nurse and to further my education. Education is the best gift you can give yourself. This is my dream, and Fresno Adult School helped to open the first door.

THE GENERAL VANG PAO HMONG STORY

Written By Mai Der Vang

It was a Monday.

A tumultuous day embittered with uncertainty and fear, many Hmong will recall June 4, 2007 and the shocking news that poured out of every major international and domestic media outlet.

Many will pose the classic questions of where were you, what were you doing and what was your reaction when you heard that General Vang Pao and several of his associates had been arrested on charges of attempting to overthrow the communist Lao government.

Elders will divulge stories of the personal heartbreak, illnesses, or inability to function that they or others experienced as a result.

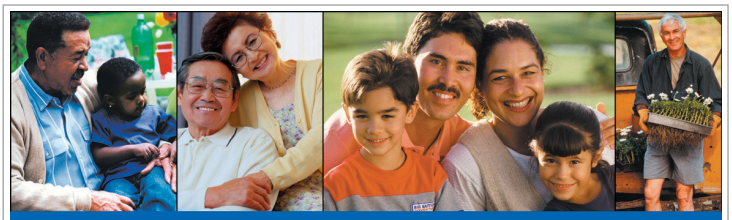

Yet still, many others will turn their heads in wariness and contempt for the situation.

Who is right and who is wrong? In spite of the differing views and reactions, many in the community can agree this incident represents a defining moment for the Hmong people.

The General...Arrested

The news on June 4 spread instantaneously through informal networks and Hmong radio, between family members, friends and relatives, near and far, reaching entire clans. People relayed the story—"did you hear, did you hear?"—that Hmong leader, General Vang Pao, had been arrested by FBI and ATF authorities on allegations that he violated the Neutrality Act and attempted to purchase arms to overthrow the communist Lao regime.

Over at Fresno's City Hall, phones rang hysterically at the office of District 1 City Councilman, Blong Xiong, as the media hastened to obtain comments from California's only elected Hmong official.

Ten other individuals were also taken into custody for their alleged involvement. But officials identified Vang Pao as the group's front-man and as leader of the Neo Hom, a Lao liberation movement. According to court documents, the group had planned to purchase $9.8 million worth of arms which would be used to overthrow the communist Lao government.

Negotiations were conducted through one of the arrested men, Harrison Jack, who had been working with an undercover ATF agent to obtain the weapons. The agent, who hid his undercover identity, tipped off the authorities and launched an six-month investigation leading up to the arrests on June 4.

The case's enormity attracted high-profile defense attorneys, John Keker and James Brosnahan, both of whom are working without compensation. On June 11, the arrested men were denied bail and would later be indicted by a federal grand jury on June 14.

But almost a month later, on July 12, many people in the Hmong community celebrated as news was released that Vang Pao would be free on bail to go home while he awaits trial.

In the wake of hearing these allegations, how does anyone make sense of what to think? When we look back on our history and at our current situation, we can start to put the pieces together.

History of War and Sacrifice

As the Vietnam War escalated during the 1960s, the CIA enlisted the assistance of General Vang Pao to lead an anti-communist operation in Laos that came to be known as the "Secret War." In going against the July 23, 1962 International agreement that declared Laos a neutral state, the United States provided covert arms and training to over 40,000 Hmong hilltribe men under Vang Pao's leadership.

Vang Pao was born in December 1929, in Xieng Khouang, Laos, to Neej Tswb Vaj and Ntxhoo Thoj, who were farmers. As a teenager, he got his start by providing translation services and working as a messenger for the French during World War II. Vang Pao was later chosen to train with other officials in a French school where he eventually acquired the title of a commissioned officer.

Fighting communism alongside the French and Americans, Vang Pao quickly grew in his rank, from a major in 1960, to lieutenant colonel, to full colonel, to brigadier general, and finally in 1964, declared as the first Hmong general.

Vang Pao's staunch leadership led the nearly 40,000 Hmong forces into numerous battles. They rescued American pilots who had been shot down, gathered intelligence, prevented communist soldiers from delivering supplies on the Ho Chi Minh trail, and defended American strongholds and entities in Laos. Hmong soldiers suffered enormous casualties. For every American soldier that died, ten Hmong soldiers died as well.

Between 1964 and 1973, Laos endured the most severe bombing any country had ever seen. According to an educational war exhibit called Legacies of War, over two million tons of bombs were released on Laos, which equates to a planeload of bombs being dropped every eight minutes, 24 hours a day, for nine years. An estimated 250,000 people died.

When the United States abandoned the war effort in 1975, Vang Pao left Laos in exile for Thailand. As the war continued to ravage, hundreds of thousands Hmong fled to refugee camps in Thailand, many of whom were following in Vang Pao's footsteps.

In the United States, Vang Pao resettled on a ranch in Montana, then later relocated to Orange County, CA. He founded the Lao Family Community, a Hmong social service organization with offices throughout the U.S.

As hundreds of thousands of Hmong began to resettle in America, the history of calamity against Hmong people did not stop after the war ended in 1975.

Although many fled Laos during the 70s and 80s, several thousands remained in the Lao jungles, steadfast in their belief to continue the fight for a free Laos. Today, their numbers have dwindled into hundreds, and they use outdated weapons from the Vietnam War to defend against violent acts of retribution from government soldiers. Many of those who remain are the wives and children of Secret War veterans.

Undercover journalists, during the past few years, have gone into the jungles to capture footage of these human rights abuses. Many of them believe the Lao government is on a mission to exterminate the remaining Hmong because the Hmong assisted the Americans during the war. Amnesty International reports that Hmong encampments are constantly attacked by the military.

A Community in Limbo

Back in the United States, Vang Pao's arrest spurred many people to action, especially Hmong parents and elders. No one knows his true intentions, but many elders speculate it was his last attempt to reclaim Laos for the free Lao people.

As Vang Pao waned inside of the walls of a Sacramento jail facility, thousands of protestors gathered peacefully on several occasions, in cities such as Sacramento and Fresno, calling for his immediate release. Parents and elders took to their city squares, carrying signs and enlarged posters of Vang Pao's image amid cries of "Free Vang Pao! Free Vang Pao!"

Many young Hmong Americans did not sit idly either.

Over at Fresno State University, students coordinated a screening of a film that illustrates the history behind the human rights abuses in Laos, called Voices of Sorrow, produced by the Fact Finding Commission. Shortly after June 4, young leaders at Stone Soup Fresno held a dialogue and press conference where they discussed the impacts of the arrests. On June 17, over 2,000 young Hmong gathered at the Sacramento Capitol steps to express anguish over the human rights abuses of the Hmong in Laos. And groups of young Hmong professionals have gathered informally with other young Hmong to have dialogues, deconstruct the issue, and attempt to make sense of the situation.

Kazong Yang, 26, a student at Fresno State University, stated she "admires [Vang Pao] for everything he's done" for the Hmong community. She hopes that what he is doing now "will be for the good of the Hmong people because he is in a position where he has the power to do good, especially because many of our parents support him."

On the internet, hundreds of people wrote public comments in response to various articles that had been published by local and national media outlets. In many of these open comments, writers expressed their loyalty to Vang Pao, yet many others criticized the General for his alleged actions.

Re-Understanding Who We Are

It is unfortunate that it took such an event as this in order for many of us to begin understanding who we are as a people, as individuals, and how far we have come. It took almost 30 years later for our full story to emerge in the mainstream, for us to think critically about our participation in the Vietnam War, for us to sincerely remind ourselves of the courage our parents must have had when they made the journey to this new land, for us to finally begin to grasp the deep longing of many elders to return to a lost homeland, and importantly, for people to even begin caring that they are Hmong.

It is an endless journey of understanding that many of us will continue to walk. As we re-connect with their roots, and learn about the struggles and history of oppression our people have endured, we will also seek to fill and understand the roles that await us in our community's future.

Vang Pao's role will continue to be engrained as part of Hmong identity simply because much of our history revolves around his leadership. Whether people support him, or whether they disagree with his alleged actions, at least this whole incident got us talking, engaging, and thinking about who we are. At least it got many of us to feel something inside.

Moving Forward

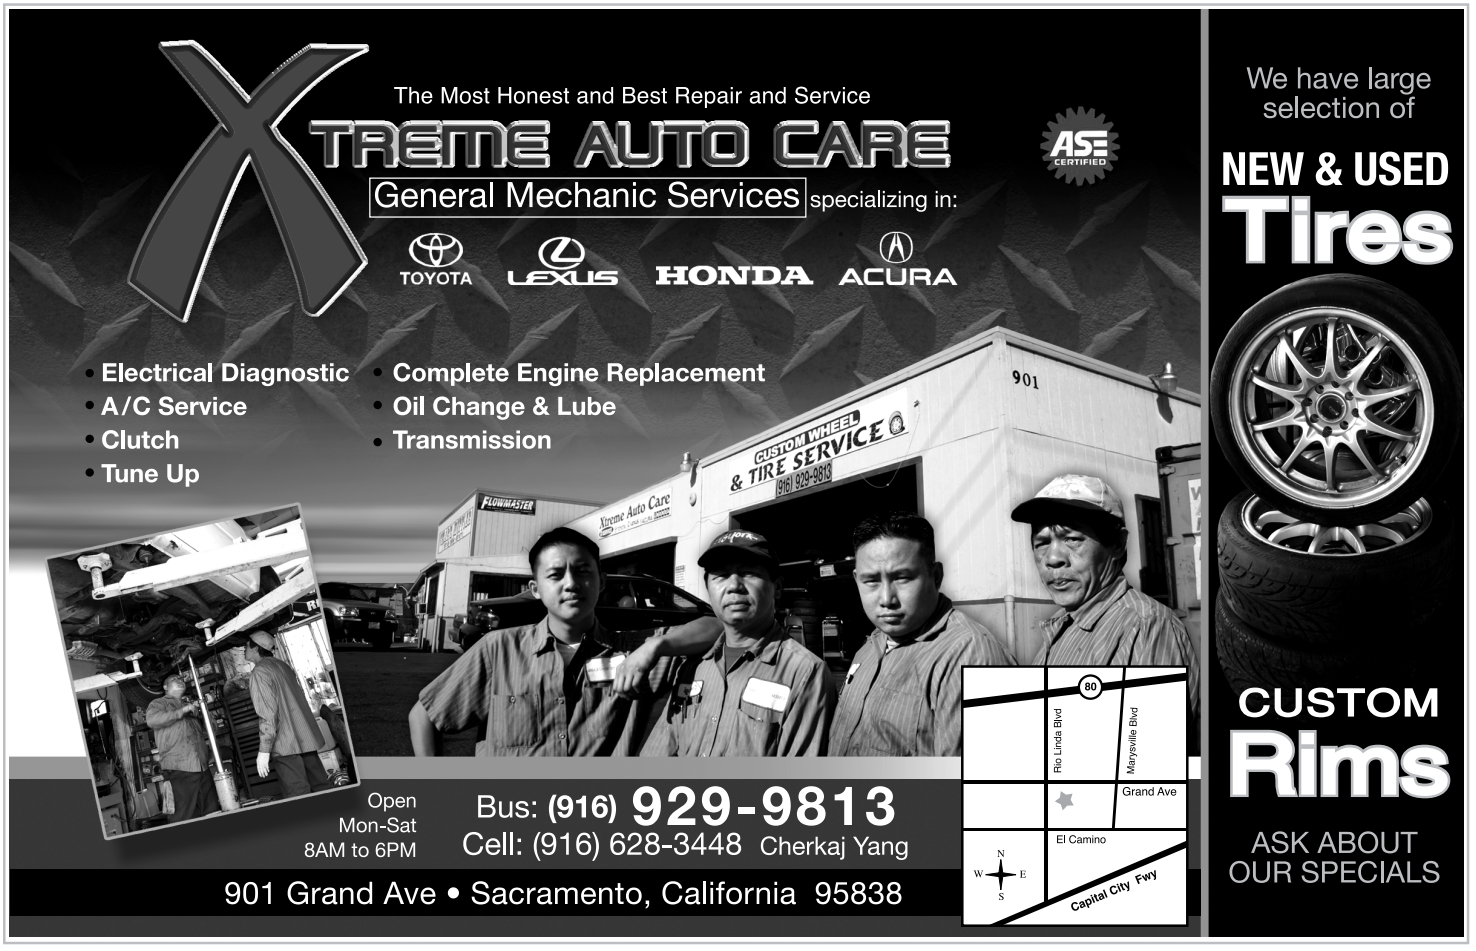

The chain of events that describe the Hmong epic journey can be traced back to the early days of the Secret War in the 1960s, and lead up to this point in time, almost 50 years later in 2007. As our community moves forward, it is uncertain what will happen next, in a few months, in one year, three years, or five years from now.

But at this one point in history, summer of 2007, the past, present and future of the Hmong community converged together. This incident spurred a community to look critically at its history, and urged many to understand that history as it applies to the current day. It prompted the community's participation on a civic level, especially among the older generation. It compelled many young people to start asking questions to the elders about Vang Pao's role; and it encouraged many elders to acknowledge that the future leadership of the community lies in today's youth.

Whether in support or in disdain, the most important factor was that many people in the community spoke out, some for the first time.

It is unusual, but true, that the arrests became a catalyst for change. It urged people to act, to think on a deeper level, to dialogue with one another, to look back on history, and to consider the challenges and hopes for the future. In the argument of where one stands on this issue, regardless of your socioeconomic background, your religious beliefs, or your age, nothing can override the fact that we are Hmong, we have Hmong blood, and we belong to a long line of Hmong ancestry that crossed borders, rivers and oceans to get here.

Five years from now, when we look back at the events of 2007, a new chapter in our history will have been added.

Blong Xiong Makes California History

Story by Jennifer Kahle

Fresno City Councilman Blong Xiong makes time at the end of a busy day to meet with Txhawb to share his story and encourage other new Americans to be proactive in their search for the American Dream.

As a small boy, Blong Xiong had no idea he would grow up to make California history; but November of 2006, he did just that. Xiong became the first Asian-American to win a seat on the Fresno City Council and the first ever Hmong-American to be elected to a city council anywhere in the state of California.

When asked what made him decide to make a run for Fresno City Council, his face broke into a wide grin. "A mental lapse!" he said, laughing. "Seriously though—I felt like I'd done my homework. But, there's really nothing that can prepare you for the experience—it's eighteen months out of your life, twenty-four/seven."

Without a doubt, Xiong's great sense of humor and his ability to accentuate the positive have been key in helping him build a proactive style of problem solving all too rare in the world of city politics, whether in Fresno or any other major city.

The June primary had whittled down a rather large group of contenders to just two; Xiong had received a scant seven fewer votes than Scott Miller, a local business man who also sought the Council seat being vacated by outgoing Councilman Tom Boyajian, who had served District One voters for as long as term-limit laws would allow. The two front-runners faced off in the November, 2006 election in a campaign that had been refreshingly cordial; a fact that did not escape the notice of the local media with one outlet saying that it could have very well been the "kindest political campaign in the United States"(1), a testament to the character of both men.

Xiong was first to announce that he would seek Boyajian's seat. The announcement came in late September of 2005, giving him more than a year to learn just what it was District One voters wanted and needed from their new Councilman.

"During the press conference at which I announced my candidacy, I tried to make it very clear that I was just a candidate—yes, I was a Hmong-American candidate—but I could be any man. District One is a mix of middle to upper-middle income residents from a variety of ethnic backgrounds. I spent a great deal of time walking the precinct, going door to door, trying to get my message out and find out what was important to them— neighborhood safety, education, issues regarding employment—they have the same concerns as everyone else."

Xiong hired campaign manager Mark Scozzar to aid him in the daunting task of communicating his message and intentions to the voters of District One. The biggest challenge Xiong may have faced was the ethnic make up of the district that he sought to represent. West-central Fresno's District One, which includes the historic Tower District, is rich in ethnic diversity and includes many families who have immigrated to the United States from Mexico and other Latin American countries. Xiong chose to meet any challenge this may have posed early on.

"It's not like my name was Tom, Dick, or Harry...or anything else that might've sounded familiar. I had to communicate to voters that we shared something that transcends language and cultural differences—we share the immigrant experience."

Xiong was just five years old when he and his family came to the States. His story echoes that of tens of thousands Southeast Asians seeking asylum in the States amid the chaotic aftermath of the Vietnam War. The Xiongs literally found themselves in the proverbial "middle" of "middle America," in small-town Kirksville, Missouri. So, conscious of their past and optimistic about their future—the Xiongs wasted no time getting to work making this country a place to call home.

Xiong was quick to give credit where credit was due. "I learned the values of service and leadership at my parents' knee," Xiong remembers. "Both of my parents have always been very involved in community activities."

Like many American families, they moved around a few times—from Missouri to Kansas, then Wisconsin. Xiong had already begun his undergraduate work at Marian College in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, when his parents decided to move to Fresno, and Xiong chose to remain behind to finish up his Bachelor's of Science in Business Administration. In 1991, Xiong joined his parents, who had bought a supermarket in Fresno which they still own today. Xiong continued his education in Fresno, earning a Master's in Business Administration from National University.

Xiong, who has made a career of public service, is eminently qualified for his current position. His pre-council work experience includes serving as an investigator for the Public Defender's office of Fresno County as well as spending six years as the Deputy Director for Fresno's Center for New Americans (FCNA) before being elected to City Council. The FCNA is a nonprofit organization which helps immigrants and refugees transition into the community. During his tenure at the Center, Xiong spearheaded many successful projects, including the Hmong Dental Health Project, the Hmong Voters Education Project, the FCNA/ACS Employment Project, the Hmong Cancer Research Project, the Living Well Project, the Hmong Resettlement Health System Navigation Project, the Hmong Family Care Project, the Telecom Project, and the FCNA's Accelerated ESL Project (2). He was also instrumental in the resettlement of one of the largest refugee camps of his compatriots still remaining in Southeast Asia, the Watthamkrabok refugee camp which consisted of approximately 16,000 refugees.

"The groundwork for a job like that can only be made possible by the inclusion of the Hmong community here. I believe that people are inherently very generous. I found that not only within the Hmong community as we worked to place so many people...but I also found that to be true in my campaign as well," Xiong told Txhaub.

When asked what his recollections were regarding the best and the worst things about the campaign, Xiong said the two things were connected in a way. "The worst part about it was asking people for money. The issue of fund raising can never be far from a candidate's mind, as distasteful as that is. But, on the flip side, whether you're walking the precinct or making contact with the voters some other way—you really get to see the pursuit of the American Dream up close... that was the best part. It was a very enriching experience."

At first glance, most jaded political hacks might judge Xiong to be too good to be true— but five minutes spent sitting across the table from the young Councilman would convince even the most die-hard skeptic that he is the genuine article. "Who I am and where I come from is never far from my mind—what I do and how I do it reflects on my entire community. The fact that I didn't win the seat of a District populated mostly by Hmong-Americans shows me that we've reached the point of being able to compete in the mainstream—that's why there's been so much interest in this story."

By all reports, the swearing in ceremony was an emotional event and Xiong had given a lot of thought about what remarks he would give. "I wondered whether I should open in English or in Hmong—ultimately I chose to open in Hmong out of respect for where I had come from; and then translate what I had said for everyone else. I welcomed everyone to "our house," and said that all were welcome to come here to the City Council and have their concerns heard and find a resolution to any difficulty."

When asked what advice he'd give to others, it was immediately apparent he'd pondered the question before. "I'd tell people to persevere—and work to make an impact. You've got to go and get the American Dream, not wait for it to drop into your lap. What it all comes down to is love for community. Rather than focusing on what makes us different, if we allow ourselves to be bound together by our commonalities, we have the ability to overcome any obstacle."

THE SOUNDERS

With more than a decade and a half of presence in the Hmong music industry,

Written By

releasing four albums with hits such as 1000 Miles, Lub Paj Rose, Los Nag Xuj Xuav, and Vim Koj Daim Duab, The Sounders, a Fresno-based band, has not only found a loyal following of fans, but has defined a generation of Hmong who have been influenced by their music. As a standout group of passionate artists, they have been credited by some Hmong for elevating the music industry to a new level. Txhawb sat down with the band to hear about their influences, their passions, and their journey in music-making.

Shaping the Band

Founder and lead singer, Thai Thao, is often known by fans as "Thai Sounders". His expressive vocals are joined by the other band members, Souk Chay Thao (keyboards), Bee Thao (bass guitarist), and Kwan Thao (guitarist).

Thai points out that much of the inspiration for Sounders is derived from earlier Hmong musicians: "I was inspired by an early-80s Hmong band called Kabnqosvas; they played old music, but they were pioneers because they put real thought into their music." Others, such as Lis Pheej, Touly Vangkhue, and Xeev Xwm, have also had significant influence on their music. Thai grew up in Montana, so he listened to and was inspired by these pioneers.

But during the band's early years, they were also inspired by the Beatles, music of the 60s, oldies, Americana rock, and The Carpenters. At one point, "we were also listening to Thai music non-stop" Souk Chay adds.

Defining the Band

After mastering the art of live performance over the years, many fans credit Sounders for their music-thumping concerts and parties. "If you came to a Sounders party, you're going to have a big show, with big equipment, lasers, fog, non-stop music and dancing!" Thai exclaims.

They are motivated by their desire to be the best they can be, and many would agree they are the best Hmong band to hear live. Yet they have also been a driving force for one another.

Even without formal training on music, they learned how to create, perform, and write their own music. Their love and passion for music drove them to learn and perfect their musical talents, but it was not easy.

Although they knew basic guitar chords, the band members honed their skills mostly by watching others. "You have to train from your heart," Thai explains charismatically, "and train your ear to listen. I'd watch someone play, and then go home and try to reproduce what I just heard."

Bee has taken a few lessons, but he learned mostly through commitment, and not giving up, even into the early morning hours. Aside from the usual routines of work, family and life, he devotes 11pm to 1am on weeknights to his guitar, "it's because you love the music no matter how busy you are." Now, he often stops crowds at the local music store whenever he is testing out a new guitar.

Kwan came from Thailand at the age of 14. He was influence by Thai Rock bands such as "Micro, Ploy and Nuvo." Thai saw his drive, his ability to study music with diligence, his love for the craft, and "that's how I got involved in Sounders," says Kwan.

For Sounders, originality and relentless dedication are critical to achieving a final product. As Thai points out, there is a "personal reward of building something new and original with your own hands and hard work."

The Sounders philosophy on music also focuses on the words, which add a distinct message and tone.

"The lyrics are the backbone that defines a song," Thai explains, "it is the words that carry the meaning and you simply build the melody and music to help carry the message that the lyrics are trying to get across to the audience."

In their popular rock ballad, "1000 Miles," the music crescendos as the chorus eagerly explodes into a few simple words that anyone can sing along to, "Kuv xav ya tuaj cuag koj / I want to fly to you." The combination of the words and the crescendo together create a melodic balance.

Their lyrics, as Thai explains, "pull from the inside out." Living in Montana, life was rather lonely. Many of their lyrics come from their personal experiences, which they have put into their songs "as a way to tell the story of life's experiences."

Distinguishing the Band

Aside from their musical craft, the band had dreams to make it big, take risks, and "overdo" the status quo.

They envisioned headlining major shows with big lights, big equipment and speakers, and creating a new brand of entertainment.

When they first started in the early 90s, they did something many other bands did not do. This would eventually set them apart and forge a long-term vision.

"We looked for a manager, Atary Xiong, who did our promotion and advertising, almost like a business plan," Thai explains. "Atary had a big vision for us, to do big concerts; you have to dream it that big." Atary added the flier, branded the group by the name "Sounders" and strengthened the dream, which spearheaded Sounders into a new era with explosive concerts every Hmong New Year that continued to bring fans back.

Yet even with a manager's help, the band members run themselves on a democratic system. They all participate in the decision-making and vote on critical issues. They share leadership by appointing one person to lead activities and events each year. They sign a contract and share the band's financial responsibilities. And they recognize that decisions are made with the best interest of the group in mind.

"It is about the band, not the individual," Thai explains, "the band always comes first, and everyone shares a role as well as time in the spotlight."

They view themselves as a band by design and by purpose, but still, "we have fun and we strive for perfection in all positions, there is no weak link," he adds.

In the end, they take on most tasks themselves. "There's a lot to do," Souk Chay explains, "find locations for concerts; obtain permits and insurance; hire security guards, sound crew, lighting crew; design album covers and posters; etc...everyone had to take a critical role and responsibility."

Atary created the name "Sounders", which did not appeal to the band at first. Even when the band members presented their ideas for names, such as Lionheart, Atary remained adamant.

Over time, the band bought into the name, and realized ultimately, as Thai explains, that "the name doesn't give stardom or life to the band, your actions shape and define the name, and a band is built and defined by the actions of each individual."

Defining Moments

Despite their success, the band has been dealt its share of challenges. When they recorded their first album, they were unprepared, especially after having booked a high-profile recording studio in Hollywood, called Saturn Sound, which Madonna previously used. The band was awestruck and inspired to be walking in the footsteps of a musical legend.

But this was their first time, and it turned out to be a learning experience. "We didn't know what we were doing," Souk Chay admits shyly, "we paid for 12 hours, at $200 per hour...but we couldn't get our equipment to work with the studio." To top everything, the band did not have a sound engineer.

They regretted wasting a lot of money. After failing to accomplish what they set out to do, they were determined to pick themselves back up and give it another try. The band learned that falling down and failing is difficult, but getting back up and doing it again is harder. "Sometimes we have to fail to discover the inner strength and ability inside each of us to succeed the second time around," says Thai.

They came back home and reworked themselves, and then finally recorded again. The result left them feeling satisfied and empowered that they created something all their own. "We're most proud of the first album," Thai shares, "we did it ourselves with our own hands and will power."

"Walking amongst greatness [Madonna, Michael Jackson] inspires you to push past the limits of your ability," he adds.

Their music has inspired a new generation of couples, many of whom fell in love at parties to one of their songs. To them, it is an honor. "We often get requests to play at weddings" says Thai.

Recently, in 2002, Sounders embarked on a two-week trip to Thailand to shoot their video, Vim Koj Daim Duab. At first, they were hesitant because of the immense time and resources needed to get the process and logistics underway. At the last minute, upon arriving in Thailand, the original production crew did not show. They had to find a new production crew.

Yet slowly, with Kwan's industry connections to Tag Team, G-Gate, and Sony Music, things came together within the span of two to three days, a new crew, the plot line, the actors and actresses. And after shooting the video and arriving back into the United States, they received the final edited video in the mail.

The final result pleased and surprised many fans. A professionally done music video, complete with Thai actors and actresses, a compelling plot line of a pining boyfriend longing for his girlfriend, interspersed with momentary shots of the band members performing in a room with large square windows overlooking the city. "We're never really ready," says Souk Chay, "but it just happens."

While in Thailand, they were struck by all the attention they received. "We felt like superstars," says Thai, "there were police all around us, people with camcorders, you draw the crowd's energy and it feeds you."

"People were shocked that our music was good," Bee adds, surprisingly that "most people, when we told them we were Hmong, they thought Hmong people only lived in the mountains, they were shocked."

Message to Youth, On Music and Life

Grasp the moment, don't let go. "You have a small window of opportunity in your life when you find your true passion," and when you find it, Thai advises, "don't step on the brake, just accelerate and go." In his words, "you have to want it bad enough...there has to be a reason, and if that reason is strong, you'll come through."

"When you passionately love to do something, and can't focus on anything else but that one thing, remember that feeling, that reason, and never forget why you started doing it in the first place."

Success does not transpire from talent alone. According to the band members, commitment and dedication will push you farther beyond what talent can do alone. Without commitment and dedication, success remains further out of reach, no matter how talented a person may be.

And don't be afraid to ask for help, or guidance. In fact, Sounders welcome questions, especially from start-up bands who are seeking advice. "We want to help others if they want to learn," Bee says. He urges the younger generation to persevere, "don't wait until you are a professional, if you have a dream, keep doing it when you still have the strong drive, push yourself to learn along the way, and you will become who you are."

Music is built on stepping stones, they believe, but one must also stay focused on the big picture and remember the small reasons why one began in the first place.

Looking Forward

It is not over for them. Even after 15 years, the band has no plans of retiring from music any time soon.

With new energy and new music coming down the pipeline, fans can expect to see more from Sounders in 2008. "Our music will now be more honest to who we are," Souk Chay shares.

They see music as having the unique ability to hold time. Since they are more settled in their lives, the next phase of their work may focus on songs that are more personal and about life's endeavors.

For Sounders, even though their musical journey will continue into the future, they have created a road map for those who follow. They have a lot to be proud of. A group of Hmong men who simply ventured out with a diehard passion to learn and do music ended up elevating the face of the industry. Put simply, by Bee, "the best is yet to come."
