LETTER FROM THE PUBLISHER

If there were one word to summarize 2008, it would be "uncertainty." In a few years, when we think back to the hardships we all experienced this year, I think that everyone will remember the incredible losses we all endured. Many people lost homes, many lost businesses, and still even more jobs perished.

Yet in the face of such adversity, I think we were reminded that the best things in life are truly free. We were all awakened to the fact that family is the most important thing, and that if we come together, our collective strength is the true power that will guide us through tragedy and hardship.

Through the process of publishing this directory, I have been blessed with the opportunity to meet and work with so many people from all walks of life. I am thankful for all the support and talent of the writers, photographers, artists, and community leaders whom share with me one common ideology: that to build a strong community, it takes passion, faith, hard work and commitment to one another.

A community is only as strong as its members. Please take the time to do your part to help our community. Volunteer your time, donate money to worthy community causes, lend your leadership and experience. Give back to your community because it is your home. Our community has such a long way to go before we can be truly prosperous.

Don't forget those who are left behind. Those who have the capacity to help should give back to nurture and guide our youth, and contribute to building a better future for our children... Love your people, because in the end, if you don't, it is almost as if you do not love yourself.

Txhawb belongs to our community. Please help shape it into what our community needs it to be. I welcome any and all ideas for its future growth, and its creative and social direction.

Thank you to all the advertisers who continue to support Txhawb. Please support their businesses so we can continue to publish this unique resource. Thank you to my family, my parents, my wife Chia and our children: Cody, Alex, and Joceyln for their unconditional love, patience and understanding—you are my strength and my true inspiration.

Misty. Her Principal

Go with Your Heart

Photography by Tudor Stanley

Go with your Heart

Story by
Burlee Vang

It was an unpredictable move in her career.

She remembers walking out onto the schoolyard and looking around with uncertainty, thinking, "All of this is on my shoulders now. If I mess up, that's it. There goes the 1,200 students and staff." The Hmong community she represented was an additional weight. A few wondered if she had received the job simply because of her ethnicity.

Finishing her B.A. in Liberal Studies at CSU Fresno, Misty Her went into education with no intentions of becoming an administrator. "I only wanted to be a teacher," she says, "and then go out and save the world, one student at a time."

At the age of 29, Misty landed the position of principal at Burroughs Elementary

She taught for five years at Burroughs Elementary where she became a Master Teacher. Her motto in education had always been: if it's not good enough for your own children, then it's not good for anyone else.

Having observed her work ethics and skills in the classroom, the principal told her she had great leadership aptitude. "Imagine what you could do if you applied that to an entire school," he advised.

"He kept steering me in that direction," she recalls. "He saw the potential in me that I was not aware of."

As a Master Teacher, Misty began to notice how the classrooms of those in her training mirrored her own. "That's when it dawned on me that if I could do this with an entire staff of fifty to sixty teachers, I could make a big difference in each classroom."

She went on to complete an M.A. in administration and supervision, and worked as vice-principal for two years. At the age of 29, Misty landed the position of principal at Burroughs Elementary.

Responsibilities

"It's an enormous task," she now says. "You're always on call. If there's a break in at the school and you're notified in the middle of the night, you have to go and check it out. If a neighborhood house burns down over the weekend, you have to see if any of the occupants were students from the school. Your job doesn't stop once you leave the campus grounds." The responsibilities stem from grass maintenance, broken sprinklers, lockdowns, student and staff supervision, curriculum planning, budgeting, to all personnel issues. On any given day, Misty spends her time from eight until two in classrooms, working and learning alongside teachers, and engaging with students. Scheduling staff meetings, planning teacher trainings, and all other personal duties of her own are handled during after school hours, usually from four to eight. Work often piles into the weekend.

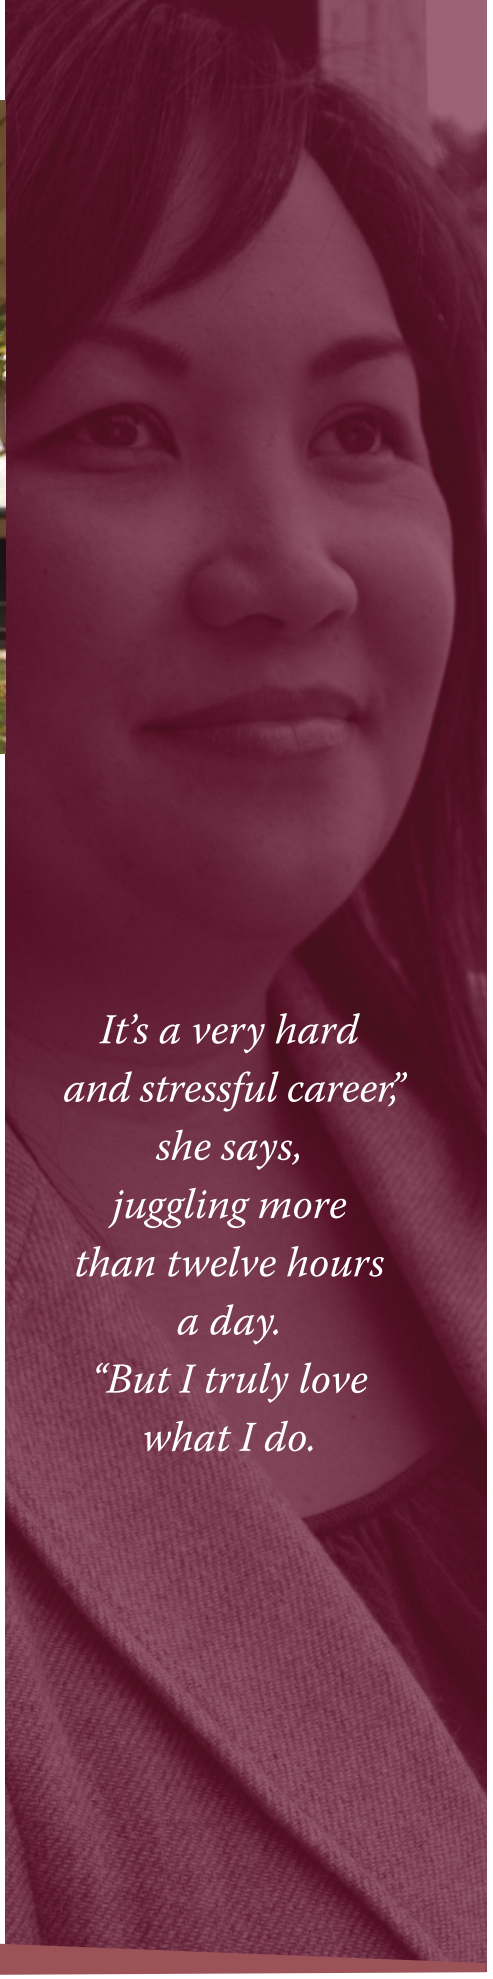

"It's a very hard and stressful career," she says, juggling more than twelve hours a day. "But I truly love what I do. I enjoy working with families and kids. In order to do the job well, you have to see yourself in the kids. I see myself in the kids."

Reaching Out

She recalls, in her childhood years, having followed her parents to work. Both were custodians for the Fresno Unified School District while drudging second jobs on the side. "Look around, this is hard labor," her father used to say when cleaning toilets.

"My parents made a hard, honest living, but it wasn't the life they wanted me to lead," says Misty. "Their suffering motivated me to make the best out of myself."

Much of her upbringing has impacted her role at Burroughs Elementary where more than half of the students live in poverty. "I deal with a lot of needy kids from dysfunctional families. My greatest challenge is working with adults who don't put the needs of kids first, who don't see the potential in children. What I try to do is instill values that aren't there. I can't control what goes on at home but I can control the six hours I have with my students. Children will excel if someone believes in them."

Education is critical to success. Misty poses the question: How many of us have made it simply for the fact that someone in academics believed in us? "There are kids whom most assume will not make it in life, but with some encouragement and intervention, they eventually become somebody. It is our obligation to teach them. As cliché as it may sound, these children are our future—our bankers, lawyers, and surgeons."

Hmong and Academics

"I see more divorces today in our community," says Misty. "We have children in foster care, families on drugs, kids raising kids."

These are social dilemmas we face now that were not prevalent among first generation Hmong families.

"The values carried by first generation Hmong seem to have vanished with the current generation. There's a big disconnect between our students now and their ethnic culture." Without the refugee struggle, and living in a "give me, give me society"—as she puts it, many children seem to have lost their motivation in academics, "that competitiveness we had as struggling first generation Hmong."

She examines her own children in comparison to her own upbringing. "My kids don't seem to need anything nowadays. They have a home, video games, the influence of TV and entertainment. They forget about the importance of being Hmong and the values that come with it."

What Misty tells her students is to stay in school, stand tall, and know that they come from a rich culture. "Sometimes I feel like we're going to lose a whole generation of kids. And it's a very frightening thought." She is especially stunned by the amount of Hmong students who refuse a college education after high school. "College will only open doors for you to see beyond your neighborhood and not let the cycle of poverty repeat," she advises.

To counter these challenges, the preparation of kids for college and career jobs was proposed at Burroughs Elementary. "I think this is such a necessary step," she says. "It shouldn't start when our students are in middle school or high school, but at the elementary level, as early as kindergarten and preschool. We need to start asking our children what they want to be and what they like to do. We need to be attentive to their individual strengths and skills."

Many Hmong students are artistically or musically talented, but such talents go unrecognized, she says. "Sometimes I'll find a child who exemplifies good writing and tell him or her that they can be a writer. They need to be nurtured in what they're good at. Too often are the kids in our community expected to become only lawyers and doctors."

Working as a Team

Over the years, Misty has learned a great deal in her position as principal. "I feel like I've grown so much. I'm aware of the fact that in order for a school to function, it takes an entire team, not an individual. I'm learning not to make decisions on the spot and to really listen to what my team is saying."

She is constantly supervising her expectations. "Leadership either makes or breaks a school." This is a belief she firmly holds to. "For me, it's always about my kids and my staff. You have to be the one to go out there and see that everything is happening accordingly. If I'm asking the children to pick up trash, then I better be picking trash with them. If I'm asking the teachers to teach a new concept, then I better be learning right along with them. A leader should always work with the team. I won't make someone do what I'm not willing to do."

Impact on the Community

In recent years, following Misty Her's ascension from teacher to principal, numerous Hmong individuals have moved into high administrative positions in academia.

When asked about her impact as the first Hmong principal in California, Misty says, "We've become visible to others. When I go to meetings now, I see our faces. People are more careful about what they say about the Hmong community. When decisions are being made, there is a given attention to Hmong kids because I'm sitting there."

While growing up, Misty didn't have career role models to look up to. Now and then Hmong students will walk up to her on the schoolyard and say, I want to be a principal someday. "You can be more than that," Misty tells them. "You can be a superintendent. Or the president of the United States.

The advice I give is:

Wherever you go in life,

you must go

with your heart."

Thinking about…a new career?

A better future? A better life? Let us help!

Bao Lo

Throughout my whole life, I have never attended school. It wasn't until I turned 30 years old that I started to go to school. Fresno Adult School was the first door that open and gave me the opportunity of an education. My goals are to complete my GED certification and continue to further my education. Education is the best gift anyone can give themself.

Michael K. Xiong

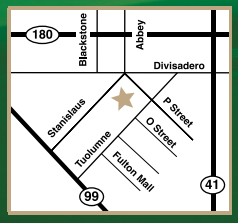

I came to César Chávez to get started on my career path. I finished the Certified Nursing Assistant Program in November 2008. My goal is to take the License Vocational Nursing class and then eventually move on to the RN program. Fresno Adult School is the key to opening a brighter future for me. I personally would like to invite you to start your career training at Fresno Adult School today. If I can do it, I know you can too.

Kelli King

Being a high school drop-out has come with many challenges. Today as a student at Fresno Adult School, I have found the resources to overcome some of those barriers. I am currently enrolled in GED classes and plan to complete all the computer classes. I also hope to enter the Certified Nurse Assistant class. The wonderful teachers and tutors have helped me to achieve my own personal goals and exceed my expectations. There are endless opportunities that follow an education.

Story by Andre Yang

from poverty to winning the 2007 World Series of Poker

Quite possibly the first time most people heard of Jerry Yang was on national television when he played as an amateur in the World Series of Poker Championship. There, beside a small mountain of money, laid cards waiting to transform the life of a refugee. And beside those cards sat a man waiting to transform the lives of others.

And then he won.

The crowd exploded in frenzy, cheering on a Hmong refugee, with chants of "USA!" as his family gathered around and held him in celebration of his victory. Later, Jerry would be seen on poker magazine covers, dressed in black, sunglasses hiding his tears, almost overshadowed by the pile of money before him.

After more than 16 hours of play at the final table, Jerry became the ultimate winner and kept the most prestigious title of all poker in America. With courage and timed aggression, he knocked out seven of his opponents and became the 2007 World Series of Poker Main Event Champion. His prize included $8.25 million dollars and the coveted championship bracelet.

Jerry's Childhood

During his interview with Txhawb, Jerry recalls memories of his childhood. "As a young boy," he jokes, "I was a troublemaker. My childhood days were similar to the American folk tale, Tom Sawyer." One time, in his village, he recruited the neighborhood gang to raid the village's chicken coops and break all the eggs. He was mischievous but smart, and had a lot of energy as a young boy.

When the Secret War in Laos ended in 1975, many of the Hmong who sided with the Americans were targeted by the Communist Pathet Lao. So they fled their homes and journeyed to Thailand in search of refuge. Jerry's family was among this group. They lived in the Ban Vinai refugee camp for over four years.

"I think my life in Thailand molded me to be the person I am today," he shares, "that was the turning point in my life. I saw the suffering, the people dying. My mother died giving birth to my younger brother, and that motivated me. If I had not gone through Thailand and the refugee camp, I would have been a different person."

While in the refugee camp, he lost a brother and a sister to malnutrition and he, himself, nearly succumbed to the same fate. One day he passed out from hunger, a twelve-year-old boy and his unfed, swollen belly.

"No one expected me to live," he says, "they already began preparing for my funeral." But as they prepared, he suddenly awoke.

Jerry sees the death of his siblings, as well as his own near death, to be motivating forces behind all that he now does; believing that, as others around him perished, there was a purpose as to why he was given a second chance at life.

This purpose motivated him to finish his first year of school in America, which was the fourth grade. He maintained a successful attitude, skipped two grades and went directly to the seventh grade. Focusing on his education, Jerry admits he "never had time to go out with friends." Yet with the support of the local Seventh Day Adventist Church, this focus on his education allowed him to surpass his father's goal of simply graduating high school. For Jerry, next came college.

Although he was accepted to several universities (including places like UC Davis and UCLA), he chose to do his undergraduate studies at Pacific Union College, where he studied Biology. Jerry graduated in 1990 at the top 1% of his class. He then applied to ten medical schools. He was accepted by eight, and he chose Loma Linda University.

At Loma Linda, he enrolled in a dual-degree program (MD & PhD). Jerry fulfilled his requirements for the MD portion and was still working on his dissertation for his PhD when he decided to take a job with San Bernardino County as a Health Educator to support his wife and children. While working in the public sector, Jerry became fascinated with the human psyche and decided to pursue a degree in Health Psychology at Trinity College of Graduate Studies.

Poker and Winning

About two years ago, Jerry was working as a clinical director for a foster family agency in Southern California. Before that, he was a regional vice-president for a private company specializing in subacute care. Jerry managed over twenty-six subacute care units within the California-Arizona-Nevada region.

One night, he and his wife were watching TV and channel surfed onto a poker show.

As they watched a professional win, Jerry pointed to the TV set and said to his wife, "I can do that. And when I win, I will use the money for good." Jerry remembers the disapproving look on his wife's face.

His wife was skeptical considering Jerry had never played a game of poker. In fact, he had never played as much as checkers growing up. His father had forbidden gambling, which included checkers and chess. He eventually convinced his wife by promising that he would spend no more than 5% of his own income and use his winnings to help others.

Much like his schooling, Jerry committed himself to learning poker, proving to be a quick learner. He excelled by "buying a couple of poker books, watching more television and making trips to the local casino."

"I started winning and could not believe it," says Jerry, I became known as The Shadow." Many of his competitors cursed and yelled at him that he was like their shadows that followed them everywhere. They were frustrated because Jerry kept winning at the poker table.

In May of 2007, Jerry played in two qualifying tournaments before he won his way to the World Series of Poker. His first tournament at the Lake Elsinore Hotel and Casino ended in a quick loss. So quick, that on his way home he made a last minute decision to take the fork in the road to the casino in Temecula, where the cards fell his way and found him victorious among the 187 competitors.

As the winner of the tournament, the casino offered to either reserve a seat for him at the World Series of Poker Championship in Las Vegas on July 7, 2007, or give him $10,000 cash. He chose to enter the tournament with merely "the intention...to go and meet some of [his] poker idols that [he] had seen on TV."

Arriving at the Rio All-Suite Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas, Jerry was one of 6,358 hopefuls vying at the tables. He used his rookie low-key and knowledge of the human psyche and behaviors to his advantage during play. Jerry studied his opponents and survived his first few days of the tournament, scooting him to an early lead.

He also applied a tenacious style of game-play during the tournament. This technique brought him all the way to the final table. Jerry admits being one of the "least skilled players at the final table with a small shot to win," and the least number of chips. But his strategy and luck allowed him to outlast all the other competitors and become a World Champion.

The story could have ended here—with Jerry winning close to $9 million (including sponsorship money), buying his wife a new car, and retiring. But it did not end here because Jerry knew he still had a purpose to serve.

In a quiet, unassuming voice, Jerry as the 2007 World Series of Poker Champion, speaks modestly, acknowledging that he has been "blessed" far more than his family could need. He only wishes to use his fortune to help others. Throughout the interview he appears more moved by the events that followed his victory at the World Series of Poker Championship than by the actual win itself.

When asked how he would like to be remembered, he pauses, than shares, "as a simple man and a champion who gave something back to the community."

After winning, Jerry made large donations to three organizations that support children. The first was The Ronald McDonald House, as he remembered how during his graduate years at Loma Linda University, the organization had given charity and lodging to families who traveled long distances so their children could undergo chemotherapy. Some of these families were Hmong.

The second charity was the Make-A-Wish Foundation where he learned that over 23 Hmong children had been assisted in making their dreams come true. But more then this Jerry shares that helping all children "have a special place in his heart."

He felt a direct connection with the third charity, Feed The Children, an international relief agency based in Oklahoma. Jerry remembered seeing Feed The Children provide aide to the Ban Vinai refugee camp when he lived there as a boy.

In all, Jerry has donated over one million dollars of his own money and has raised over $700,000 for charities. During the past year as a World Champion, he traveled to many places around the world playing poker and hosting charity events. He used his celebrity status to raise money for disadvantaged children of all cultural backgrounds.

In the future, he plans to establish the Jerry Yang Foundation Scholarship Fund to provide funds for Hmong students in college. He wants to go back to Thailand to help struggling orphans. And he also plans to build a Hmong museum, which he knows will take some time.

For Jerry, this is simply the beginning of his journey to become a champion of the people. He is a contributor whose heart called him to give gifts that are only beginning to unfold. And he is creating impact which will be felt long after he places his final bet or bluff.

(Txhawb Exclusive Interview with a Hmong Cardiologist Dr Toumoua)

Listen to your Heart

Dr Toumoua has accomplished more than many would have expected... but at the heart of the matter, he still finds inspiration from deep inside.

The Story of Dr. Mouatou Mouanoutoua

Story by Andre Yang
Photography by Tudor Stanley

At the intersection of childhood and becoming an adult, many parents dream of great futures for their children, whether it is to become a businessperson, a lawyer, a professional sports star, a pharmacist, or a surgeon. These dreams, though challenging to achieve, are possible.

For one man, becoming a successful pharmacist and businessman did not enable him to fully help others. So Dr. Mouatou Mouanoutoua chose to start a new path all over again because he knew in his heart there was more he could do.

A refugee from Laos, Dr. Mouanoutoua followed his heart to find education and opportunity in his journey to improve the lives of others. As a cardiologist in Fresno, he heals the hearts of his patients.

Before arriving to America in 1976, Dr. Mouanoutoua almost never started on his path to medicine. "At birth," he shares, "I was very sick and was not going to survive. I was lucky to be alive and it made me believe that I should help people survive, because I lived." Surviving this illness spurred his desire to heal others.

Dr. Mouanoutoua's journey to become a cardiologist began at an early age. He began volunteering at hospitals where his desire to pursue a career in the medical field strengthened.

After high school, Dr. Mouanoutoua took his first steps toward a career in Pharmacy, selecting the University of California, Irvine for his undergraduate studies. Graduating with a Bachelor's of Science degree in Pre-Pharmacy in 1985, he moved on to the University of the Pacific to receive his Pharm. D degree. After graduating from pharmacy school, he moved to Fresno and thrived as the owner of Tou's Pharmacy for four years.

Despite his success, Dr. Mouanoutoua still wanted do more for others. As a pharmacist, he explains, he can "dispense medication to patients," but his desire to help others made the career field "not satisfying enough." He was feeling a call to do more to help people.

"Pharmacists are limited in what they can do," he continues, "mainly educate the patient about their medicine and dispense medication. However, [due to the education required] Pharmacists have extensive knowledge related to human anatomy/physiology and disease process which [they] cannot put into practice."

Faced with this dilemma, Dr. Mouanoutoua decided to return to school and pursue a Medical Doctorate so he could further his ability to help others.

His journey to become a doctor led him to the West Indies, in the Caribbean, where he attended medical school at Ross University. During his first three years Dr. Mouanoutoua studied General Medicine, which is typical for medical students as it allows them time and experience to determine their field of specialty.

In his fourth year at medical school, he chose to concentrate in Cardiology, focusing on the heart and blood vessels. "Changes in the medical field in the early 90's," he shares, "made the field more popular, as more could be done for the patient, through research and advancement in technology." Dr. Mouanoutoua says he chose Cardiology over General Practice "because heart disease is the number one cause of death in the western world and an interventional cardiologist can actually alter the disease process by performing angioplasty and stenting (open the blood vessel without surgery) to restore blood flow to an obstructed vessel."

Dr. Mouanoutoua spends four days a week at the hospital and devotes his fifth day to a clinic where he sees patients from the Hmong community.

After finishing medical school, Dr. Mouanoutoua spent an additional seven years training in Internal Medicine and Cardiology at the University of Wisconsin Medical School in Milwaukee, WI. Upon completion of his training in 2005, he returned to Fresno and gained employment at the University of California, San Francisco (UCSF) Medical Center. Currently, he is the only board certified interventional cardiologist at UCSF of Fresno and will become the Interventional Cardiology Director at The Community Regional Medical Center of Fresno. Utilizing his skills, Dr. Mouanoutoua spends four days a week at the hospital and devotes his fifth day to a clinic where he sees patients from the Hmong community. Through his advocacy, he educates others on how to achieve and maintain a healthy lifestyle.

Yet he has often had to strike a delicate balance between Hmong and Western views on disease and treatment. In the case of a middle age Hmong woman with heart disease, the patient's family expressed their wish to use cultural and religious practices to determine the health and future impact of the patient. Being Hmong himself, Dr. Mouanoutoua understood the family's request for time to perform these rituals before resorting to Western medicine. He did explain to them the possible repercussions of not allowing sufficient time for medical treatment, but they decided to proceed with the rituals. Time passed, and by the time the family had brought the patient back to him, it was already too late.

Mindful of the needs of the community, Dr. Mouanoutoua is concerned for Hmong people over 30 years of age, as well as elders. "Vascular problems," he notes, "have escalated within the Hmong community over the past 10 years." This includes strokes, heart attacks and renal failure. Dr. Mouanoutoua also notes that these health concerns are not related to genetics because, "in Laos, these diseases were uncommon."

He attributes the problem to poor eating habits and lack of exercise. "Many Hmong," he says, "are not taking care of themselves by monitoring blood pressure, diet, cholesterol, and activity levels." Dr. Mouanoutoua says he will strive to continue educating and treating those with heart illness because "the problems will only grow with future generations."

He emphasizes that people over the age of 40 need to be more "aware of their health, exercise more, and improve their eating habits." Maintaining one's health at this age, adds Dr. Mouanoutoua, "is critical in ensuring the long-term health of an individual."

He also advises it is important to monitor your health and to be aware of any bodily changes, keeping in mind that "just because you do not feel pain does not mean you are healthy." Most importantly, he recommends healthy eating and regular exercise to maintain good health.

In the end, for Dr. Mouanoutoua, it has always been about a desire to help others improve their lives through health and healing. All of this happened because he heard the ringing in his heart calling him to heal, and he answered.

INSIDE AB2064

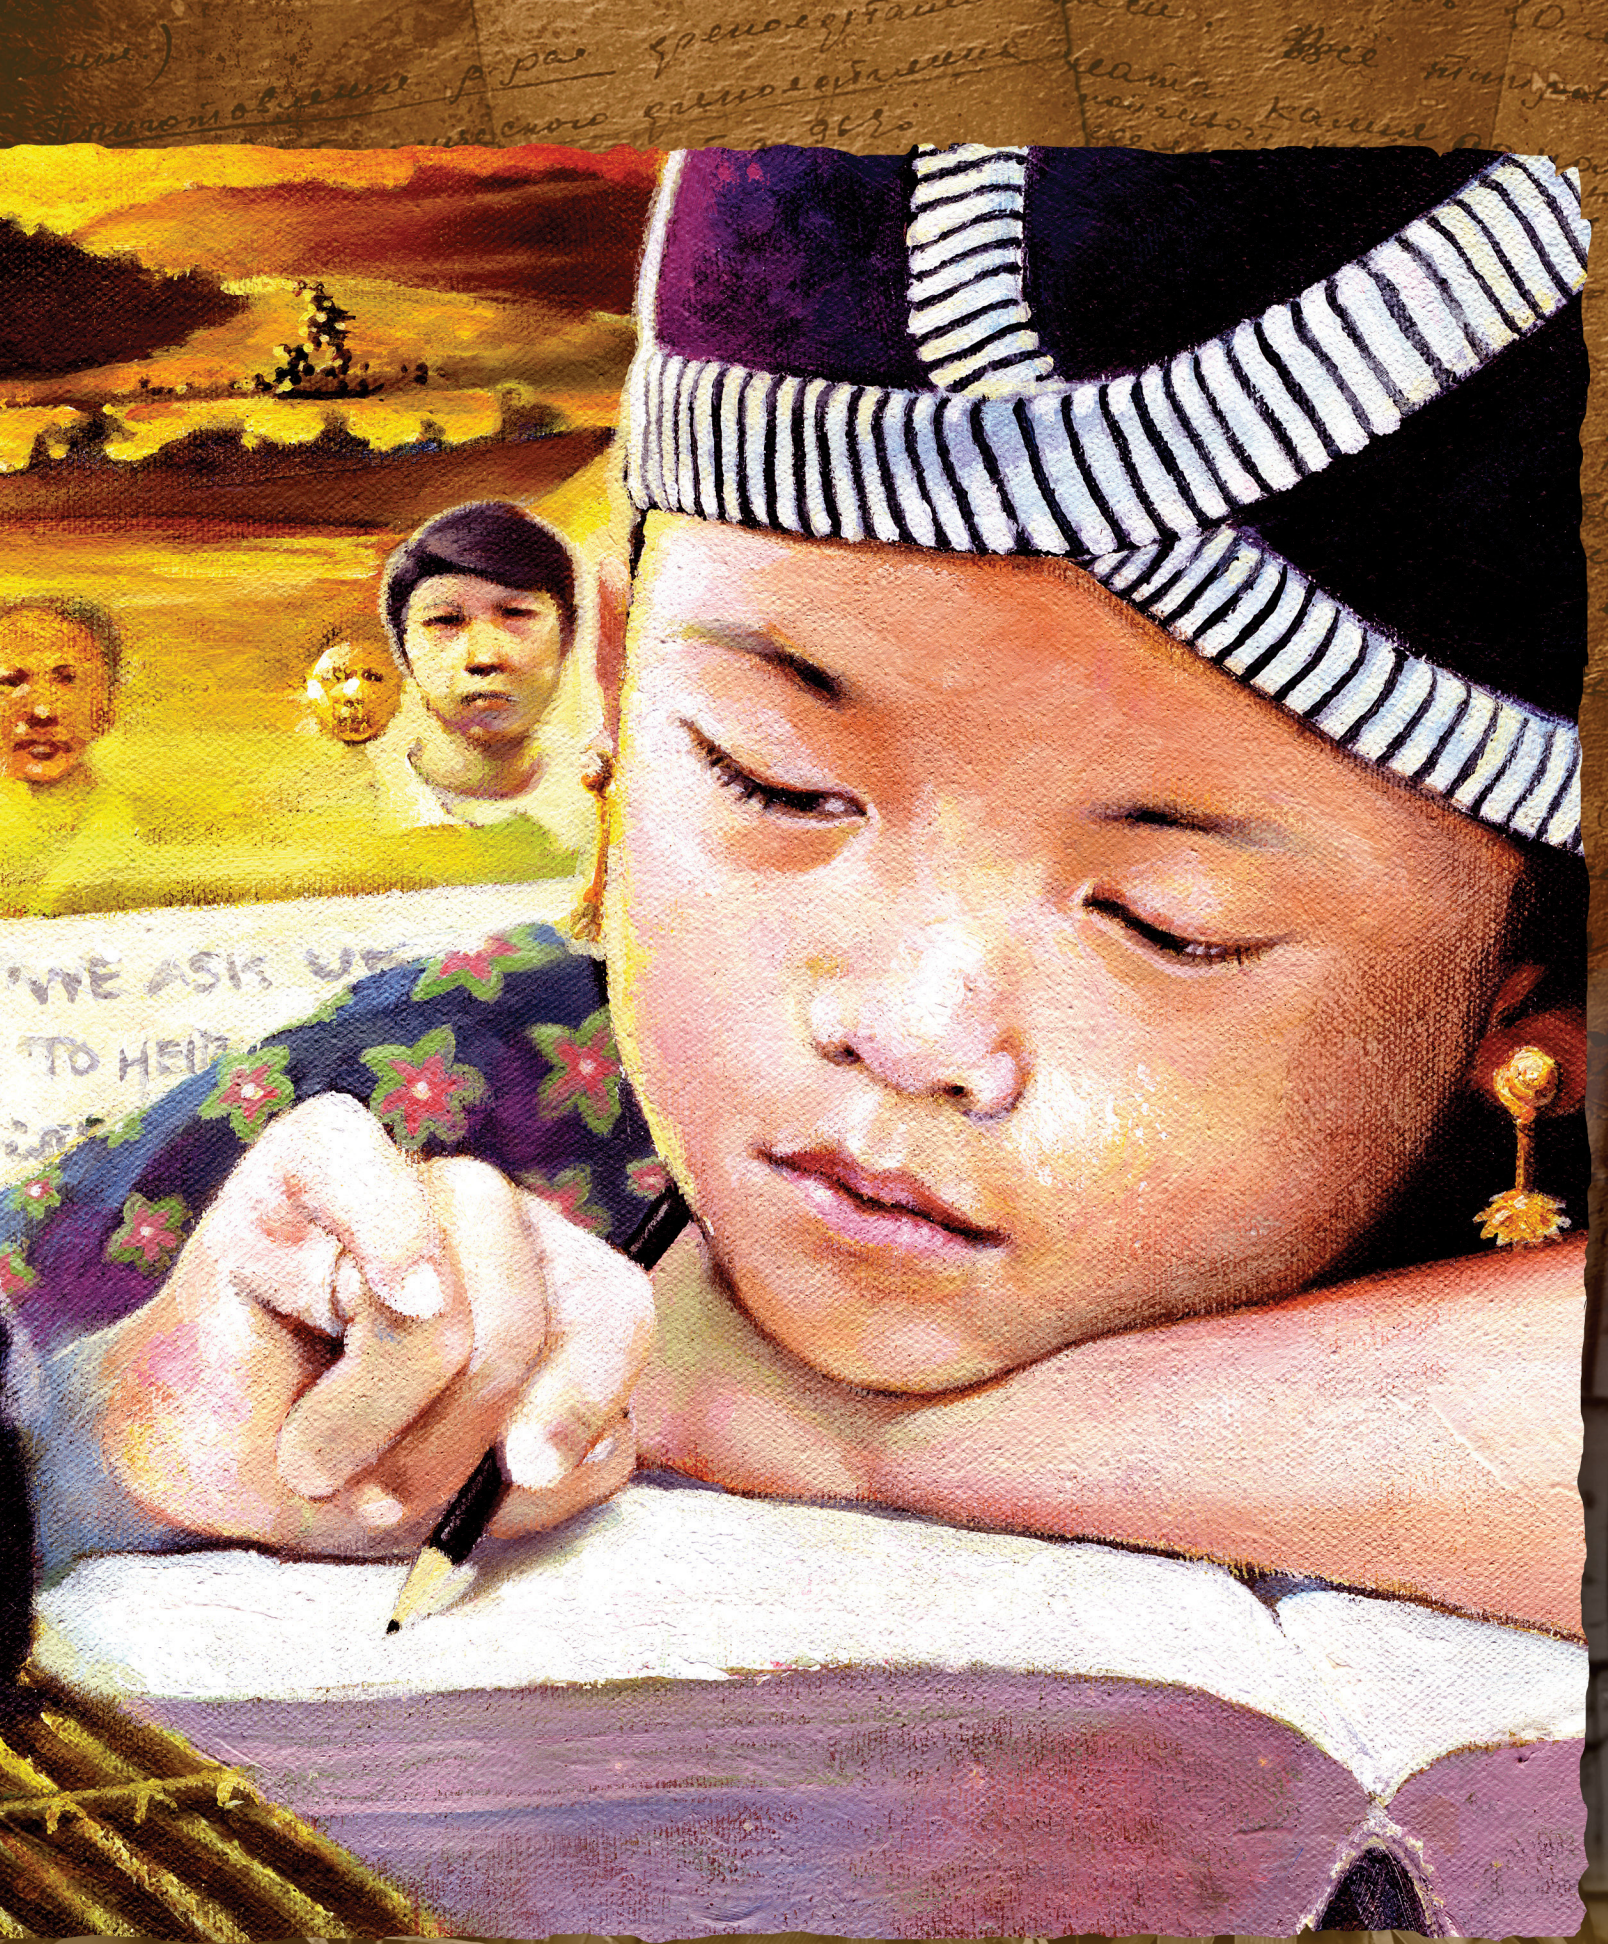

Story By
Mai Der Vang

In a typical U.S. History high school classroom, a student will learn just about anything related to the history of the United States. Topics might include the Civil War, FDR's presidency, Pearl Harbor, and other events and people that impacted the U.S. since the American Revolution.

Given strict curriculum standards in California, it is not common practice, then, for teachers to teach about the "Secret War" in Laos when discussion on the Vietnam War arises. The Hmong occupy a small timeframe when placed in contrast to larger events in America's history.

WE ASK

But a recent State Assembly Bill, which Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger did not sign this year, would have taken a proactive approach to educating students about the role of many Southeast Asians during that precarious war. As allies to the United States in a covert operation to combat communism, thousands of Southeast Asians, especially Hmong, died during the Vietnam War.

Assembly Bill 2064 would have required the state's next textbook curriculum update in 2011 to include teaching on the refugee history and new American experiences of Southeast Asians, such as the Hmong, Vietnamese, Lao, and Mien, among others.

Passed in 2003, a previous bill, Assembly Bill 78, encouraged teachers to teach about the Secret War. Yet since then implementing AB 78 has been slow. AB 2064 would have changed that and make it a teaching requirement to come straight from the textbook.

"If the bill would have passed," states Doua Vu, an educator in the Fresno Unified School District, "it would have been great timing for the next round of History/Social Science book adoptions in 2009."

Both AB 78 and AB 2064 were developed through the support of community members, like Doua, and authored by State Assemblyman Juan Arambula along with his Chief of Staff Sarah Reyes.

Impact On Students

Had the bill passed, it could have impacted many Hmong high school students in a positive way while also providing other students an opportunity to learn more about their Hmong peers.

For Fresno student Connie Vang, having had the chance to learn about her history allowed her to develop cultural pride and respect for her parents. In a late-August commentary for New America Media, she wrote: "In school, I did not learn anything about my Hmong culture, so it made me think that being Hmong was not important. I tried my best to separate from Hmong people."

Connie's isolation from Hmong culture provoked tension and dispute between her and her parents. She did poorly in school and had low self-esteem.

Many Hmong students struggle to understand and accept their culture in a society where they are easily absorbed into American lifestyles, through activities Connie mentions, such as going to the movies, gossiping and buying clothes. She states that her reluctance to participate in Hmong culture prevented her from attending cultural events and speaking Hmong. Connie even said she would never date or marry a Hmong person.

But it wasn't until Connie became involved in a youth multimedia program called "Hmong Voices" that she began to unravel the story of her community and learn about its unfortunate history. She continues on to say: "Now, it pains me to know I hurt my parents in the past. After hearing the tragic stories of how the Hmong arrived to America, I developed more respect for [them]…I started to try harder".

Doua believes that the bill would promote more positive interaction between Hmong youth and their parents and elders. "Having positive role models and positive images of our community brings greater pride to our children," she says, "it inspires them to emulate those before them, it helps to bridge the intergenerational and intercultural gaps, and facilitates cross-cultural understanding."

It is unlikely that every young person will respond like Connie. However, having cultural knowledge can empower more Hmong students to start exploring, earlier in life, their cultural identity in an effort to understand and better balance it with their American one. Otherwise, some young people may resort to cultural isolation, have low self-esteem, or resent their parents and elders, as Connie did.

This sense of self-discovery may extend to other students as well. It may encourage non-Hmong students to seek out and learn more about their own history and culture, if they haven't already. Discussion on someone else's culture can invite curiosity or inquiry into one's own culture. Connie points out that after educating her teachers and peers about the Hmong, several "non-Hmong students came up to [her] and asked more questions."

Learning one's cultural history in a public U.S. History high school classroom validates the importance of that culture in the larger framework of American history. "Many students," Connie writes, "believe that if [they] don't learn something in school, it's not important enough to know or care about in the first place."

Challenges for AB 2064

Yet despite optimism among students and supporters, AB 2064 faced tough critics who were wary of the curriculum burdens it could place on the state's education system.

Although the bill had no fiscal impact, some worried how it could affect other aspects of the education curriculum. A person by the name "Jenny" responded to Connie's article by posting a comment online:

Individuals and community groups can focus on cultural heritage, but not our public schools…there isn't the money or the time in the school year to divert our students from the important coursework they already aren't learning.

Critics also included groups aimed at promoting "white culture". American Renaissance, an anti-multiculturalism news website, posted excerpts of Connie's commentary. The article created a discussion buzz, with comments like "Everyone needs to be American or leave America" from someone named "SS", and another such comment from an anonymous poster: "Obviously they couldn't have been that much help [during the war], since no one knows about them, and we lost the war."

There are some who oppose the bill due to budget and curriculum reasons, even though the bill has no known fiscal impact, and yet there are some who oppose because they want to promote American homogeneity. These issues highlight a huge challenge facing California schools and also reveal that many Americans still lack knowledge about the contribution of the Hmong during the Vietnam War, or perhaps they feel indifferent. That, and/or they may not be as accepting of people from other cultures.

Negative perceptions such as these may discourage Americans from seeing how the Hmong have contributed to society, from small business development, to growth in education, to gains in workforce and agriculture.

Other comments questioned why Hmong parents weren't educating their children about the history. Some parents take full advantage and will tell their children the war stories from that decade. However, most parents are unable to effectively communicate with their children due to language, social and generational issues. In many cases, it is not until the student learns about his/her own cultural history through an external source that they then develop respect for their parents and admiration for their culture.

Aside from being written into textbooks, the bill faced the question of how it will be implemented into the learning curriculum. Teachers would likely need to receive appropriate training so they can instruct students effectively. Connie makes the point that several of her teachers had no clue about the Hmong. "In my classes," Connie states, "I ended up educating my teachers and classmates about the Hmong and how they helped during the Vietnam War…no one seemed to know".

Knowing One's History

AB 2064 would not have solved all the cultural and educational issues faced by Hmong teens today. But it would have provided the next generation of students with new knowledge so they can be prepared to lead and work with one another to benefit the growing and diverse communities of the future California.

It is important for the state to continually update its educational coursework to reflect the new voices and faces of California. Doing so will make the coursework relevant and timely for students. In Connie's case, learning about her history helped her define a present understanding of who she is, of her parents, and of her community. "When people don't know their cultural history," she writes, "they don't know a part of themselves."

Doua was extremely disappointed with the Governor's decision, she says, "given all of [the community's] hard work and the fact that it had received overwhelming support up until it reached his desk." There were numerous individuals and organizations at the local, state, and national levels that supported this bill, such as Fresno City Councilmember Blong Xiong and the Southeast Asia Resource Action Center (SEARAC) among others.

Since AB 2064 did not pass, primarily because it was backed by Democrats and lacked bi-partisan support, Doua states she does not foresee it being reintroduced in the next couple of years, unless there is a shift in the current administration. She does, however, advise that the "community stay on top of the State Board of Education to see that what is included in the next textbook adoption provides a fair representation of [Hmong] people's contributions to America." Although the impact might not be felt right now, AB 2064's failure to pass could affect future generations down the line, when the Hmong children of today grow up to become adults. Will they know about the Secret War? Will they feel empowered to maintain the Hmong language? Will they know the stories of the dangerous journeys that their grandparents and great-grandparents took to in order to come to America?

These questions remain unanswered, just like the future of the Hmong community remains unknown. But one thing that is known is that education and knowledge are powerful tools to strengthening one's identity and role in the community. When young people know their cultural history, they will know from where they have come so that they can begin to discover where they will go in the future.

Abel Vang | txhawb profile

After completing a B.S. in Molecular Biology, Abel Vang realized his weekend filmmaking had become more than a hobby. "I had devoted my undergraduate studies for something I couldn't imagine myself happily doing in the long run," he says, recollecting how he found himself in the fork of a road after graduation. Instead of applying to medical school, which had been the plan for years, he decided on film school. An application sent to USC's School of Cinematic Arts was answered with an acceptance. "I was truly excited to be a part of the best film school in the nation, especially as the first Hmong male accepted to their Master of Arts program."

Abel's early horror shorts, made with the intent to build suspense and shock, influenced by Sam Raimi (The Evil Dead, Spider-Man), were well received in reviews by FCP podcast and screenings by H.A.S.E. (Hmong Arts Summit & Exhibition), Diversicon, and FFILMM (Fresno Films involving Local Movie Makers). His later dramatic shorts and full-length feature, the Good-Hearted Daughter (2008), drew their inspirations from international filmmaker Zhang Yimou (Raise the Red Lantern, Judo, The Road Home). "I want to explore something that has been overlooked in Hmong movies," says Abel, when speaking about the content and style of his films. "We live in a culture with high regards toward obedience, manners, subtlety—silence—that is why I want to focus on what is not being said or directly known from conversations between people. In the Good-Hearted Daughter, I wanted to capture the unsaid struggle and love shared by two widows, an old woman and her daughter-in-law. There is very little dialogue throughout, thus forcing viewers to scrutinize for underlying emotions and conflicts that are not being presented. My dramatic shorts follow this same pattern. Of course, such films will depend on the patience of the audience."

Recently, Abel Vang has been sending his work out to national and international film festivals, and has garnered the attention of film conventions and distributors alike. In the summer of 2008, he assisted the casting department for Clint Eastwood's upcoming film, Gran Torino.

Sandy Cha

Shaped by ambition, education, and her childhood memories of growing up below the poverty line, Sandy Cha has become a strong advocate for economic change among underprivileged communities. She is currently Wells Fargo's Community Development Officer in the Central California region, and also sits on the Strategic Advisory Board for Wells Fargo's Asian Business Services program. A diligent supporter of financial literacy, Sandy teaches money management skills to low/moderate-income families and individuals, with a focus on affordable housing, minority business development, and women's economic empowerment.

"By the time I came on board, our Automatic Teller Machines were already providing services in Hmong," says Sandy, when speaking on behalf of the work Wells Fargo has done for the Central Valley's Hmong population. "A lot of what I'm doing is building on that relationship established between our bank and my community, and focusing my efforts on creating or finding innovative ways for our bank to help meet the credit needs of my community." In recent years, she has invited bankers to Fresno State, her alma mater, to speak to the Hmong Student Association and other student organizations on financial education. A grant was also given to the Fresno Center for New Americans to purchase vehicles for transporting clients to take their citizenship tests, among other appointments with the county. Wells Fargo even provided bank tours for these clients to learn about the monetary resources available and to see firsthand the inside of a financial institution.

"There is still much I want to do, especially for our Hmong organizations and businesses," says Sandy, who recently co-founded the Asian Business Institute and Resource Center (ABIRC) to serve the business needs of the Central Valley's pan-Asian population. In addition, Sandy Cha is also a Board member for South East Asia Resource Action Center (SEARAC), the Fresno County Women's Chamber of Commerce, Central California Asian Pacific Women, and serves on the Regional Advisory Committee of ByDesign Financial Solutions.

Mai Der Vang

Mai Der Vang, a writer based in Fresno, received her B.A. in English from UC Berkeley in 2003. Her editorial commentaries have been published in the San Francisco Chronicle, the Fresno Bee, the Sacramento Bee, Hmong Times, the Orange County Register, and Asian Week. "I do a lot of commentaries focused on Hmong issues that don't really receive media attention," she says, emphasizing how the power of communication through writing has allowed her to publicly speak not only for herself, but on the behalf of others as well. Being Hmong and working with written English—in an "untapped field," as she describes it, Mai Der is a pioneer, both as an intrepid voice for her community and as an artistic individual.

Aside from her op-ed and journalistic pieces, Mai Der also writes creative prose and poetry, of which some have been featured in Paj Ntaub Voice (a Hmong literary journal based in Minnesota) and performed at the Fresno Art Museum, the Tamejavi Festivals, and fundraising events for Stone Soup Fresno. She writes vastly about Hmong American experiences, exploring themes such as identity, gender, displacement, and loss, drawing her inspiration from international voices of exile such as Pablo Neruda, the Chilean poet and 1971 Nobel Laureate. "I find writing very therapeutic," she says, reminiscing on how poetry helped her through difficult stages in her life. "Although there is focus on technique and craft, what's most important is how one can present their inner frustrations and complexities through art. I want to create dialogue, whether with a poem, story, or article. If I can make my readers feel something as a result of it—enjoyment or anger—then I've achieved what I wanted to do as a writer."

Currently, Mai Der is a coordinator for the kNOw, a media program where she organizes after school writing workshops for youth. She is also the board president for Central California Asian Pacific Women, a cofounder of Sisters of Hmong Empowered, a member of the Hmong American Writers' Circle, and serves on the community advisory board for KSEE 24. Juggling a busy schedule by day, Mai Der usually spends her evenings tapping away at her keyboard until midnight, aspiring to eventually publish her own book.

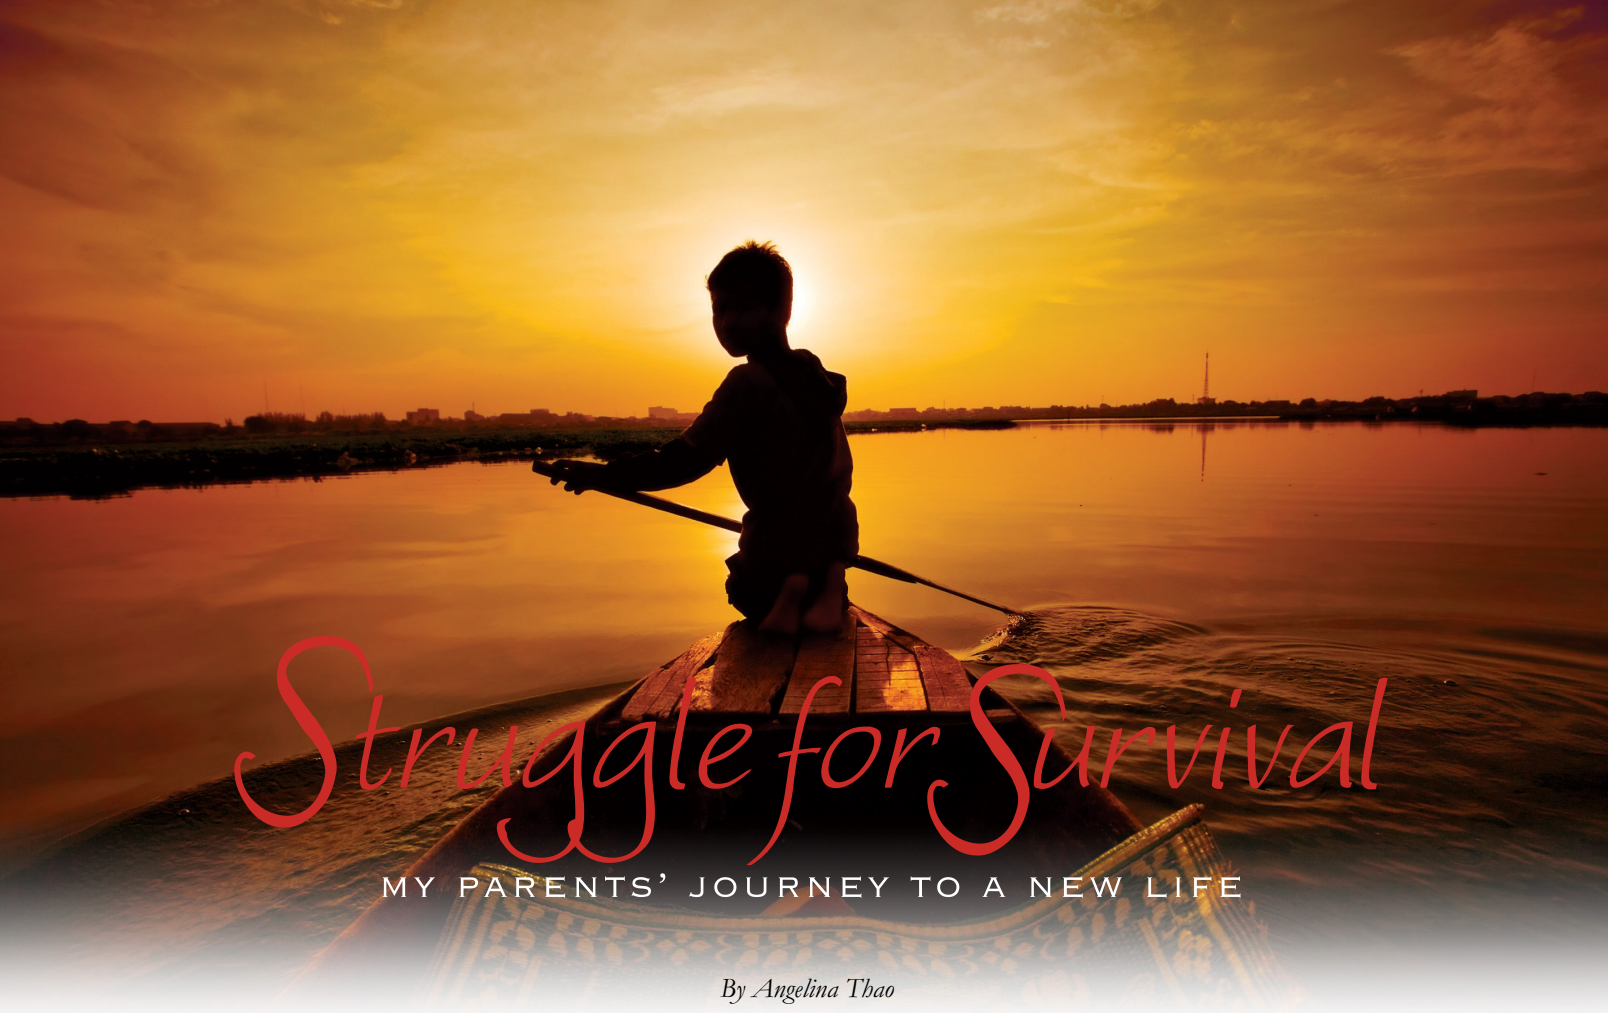

Boonma Yang | txhawb profile

Boonma Yang attended the Academy of Art University in San Francisco where he received his Fine Art degree in 2005. "I started in architecture," he says, "but after taking a painting class, I realized what kind of an artist I wanted to become." Returning to Merced, his hometown, Boonma continues to work with oil-based paints, distinctive for their slow-drying. Now and then, he'll dabble with quick-drying acrylics and other mediums.

"Being Hmong is essential to what I do," he says, when describing his impressive body of work. "As one of the few Hmong students in art school, I was very lonely." Through painting, Boonma has attempted to shed awareness on Hmong identity and issues. Often, the brushwork and content of his pieces aim to capture or question slices of culture, spirituality, and history. His series on the Secret War and its ragtag freedom fighters still hiding in Laotian jungles, exhibited in Merced, garnered mixed criticism from the public. One Vietnam veteran was offended by the images Boonma had portrayed, saying "We've already let your people come to the United States,"—to which Boonma explained that his intention was to show the contribution to America by the Hmong, and how thousands had been abandoned in Laos after the war. "I'm trying to be more political these days," he remarks with a smile.

For Boonma, painting is more than just a mere outlet for expression. "Bottling up all the external and internal conflicts within an individual will only bring illness," he believes. "Through art, I am able to expel all of that and turn it into something else." Boonma's creativity is not limited only to the painter's canvas or Masonite board, having used wooden doors and furniture as his working surface. "You can basically paint on anything and everything," he says, always keeping an eye out for what can be salvaged and transformed into a masterpiece. His paintings have been showcased at Gallery One, located in the bay area, among other venues across the Central Valley. His paintings have been sold at a value of $2,000.

Struggle for Survival

MY PARENTS' JOURNEY TO A NEW LIFE

By Angelina Thao

As a child, I enjoyed story time at night with my parents. Throughout my life, I've heard all kinds of stories, ones about Hmong history, about my culture, scary stories, funny stories, and historical ones.

But the story I admire and love most is the amazing story about my parents trying to escape from Laos to Thailand so they could reach freedom. During that journey, they made so many sacrifices and hard decisions. This was a story that was kept hidden and when it was shared with me, it brought tears to my eyes (and still does).

This is the story of my parents' journey to freedom.

My parents, grandparents, great-grandparents, aunts, uncles, and cousins all lived under one roof in a village in Laos near a big road, close to a military base. One night in 1975, when the Vietnamese communists had won and taken over much of Southeast Asia, the family was up late trying to decide what they were going to do.

Some were saying to run for it, but others didn't just want to run blindly and not know where they were going. So the whole family concluded that everyone stays and whoever wants to leave can leave in the morning.

I don't really know much about the Vietnam War. All I know is that the war started because of the spread of communism. The Americans were trying to stop communism and they asked the Hmong men to help them fight. After a couple of years, the Americans realized they weren't going to win this war. They retreated and so did all the soldiers that fought with them. After that happened, many people had to choose whether to stay in Laos and live their life in fear, or escape with everyone else to Thailand.

The next morning came, and there were Vietnamese communist soldiers everywhere, patrolling and unwilling to let people leave the village. There were guns pointing in all directions and big green tanks rolling through the village.

My mom was scared and had no idea what was going to happen. She thought in a split second, guns would be fired and bodies would be lying all over the village. My parents and other relatives hid inside the house. My mom remembers the shouting and chanting from the soldiers.

They said, "Don't leave my brothers. We love you. Don't follow the enemy, the Americans. Stay with us and we will love you. If you go to America, you will meet poverty because they won't love you like we will. Stay, don't follow them. This war has ended and the land is at peace. Stay, don't leave."

My dad did not want to stay at all. He wanted to leave because the Hmong army leader, General Vang Pao, had already left. But my dad knew it would be hard to leave and also, my parents were poor and couldn't make the trip. They had to stay and save up money because they would need the money to bribe the Lao fisherman and guides to help them escape.

My parents were always trying to escape, or were thinking about it, but they weren't financially set yet. Not just that but when the communist soldiers took over, they assigned two soldiers to each family or house in the village. Those soldiers were responsible for keeping track of the families so they wouldn't escape.

Those soldiers did everything with the families in the village. The two soldiers shared chores with my parents, ate, slept, and practically lived with my parents and everyone else in the house. No one had any privacy, which made hard it to escape.

My parents stayed in the village from 1975 until 1983, for eight years. During those years, the communist soldiers began to take and steal from the villagers. They took big portions of the crops that were grown by villagers. Not just that, but they made the land hard to farm because they killed plants with chemicals overnight, which I think is evil. My parents' crops were good and fresh one day, and then suddenly, the next morning, they turned yellow and dead. One night, my dad stayed at the farm house to see what was causing the crop failures, and he saw what the communist soldiers were doing. My dad got caught in some of the chemicals and he got sick, so sick that he almost died. Those chemicals killed many crops but the soldiers were still expecting their portions from each of the families in the village. Many families began to have less and less crops for themselves.

When my dad recovered from the chemicals, he started to buy cows at a cheap price and then brought them to the larger cities, and sold them at higher prices. He started to save up along with my mother. It had been a couple of years already since the soldiers took over the village, so they didn't keep a tight watch anymore.

My dad was able to travel and he found a trustworthy guide who showed him a safe way to Thailand. The deal and promise was made.

My dad paid the guide and the guide promised to take my parents and two sisters safely to the Mekong River.

When my dad was told to prepare for the journey, he was excited but sad. He told my grandpa that he had found a way to freedom and for my grandpa to get ready to leave. But my grandpa was old, and he still had his own dad there as well, who is my great-grandfather. My dad is the youngest son, without a mother because my grandma died when he was only five years old, so all this made it harder for him to leave my grandpa.

One night, while the soldiers were asleep, the guide came and gave the signal to get ready to go. My dad did not get to see or say good bye to my grandpa. It was a sad, quiet escape in the middle of the night. My mom says she can still remember the heartbroken look on his face, as he turned to look at the house one last time.

Two of my uncles and their own families also went on the journey with my parents as well. My dad carried a bag of rice and a child inside a bamboo carrier. My mom carried a pot filled with cooked rice and a bottle of water, along with a child on her back and a child in the womb. My aunts and uncles packed the same things as well.

On the first night, they had traveled far and deep into the Lao jungles. The guide led them around the villages that were under communist control. On the second night, my mom had to cook rice and fill up the water bottle again. When they came near the villages with communist soldiers, they sat down and rested until the guide found the way.

It was hard to keep walking because of the heavy loads they were carrying. My mom told me the baby she carried and plus the rice pot was so heavy she could hardly keep up with the rest. She could feel the weight on her shoulders even when she took the load off. My parents had huge red lines that sunk into their shoulders and skin.

On the sixth night, the guide gathered them into a little village alongside of the Mekong River. The guide helped my parents find a Lao fisherman who was willing to take them to Thailand. Each person had to pay one silver bar, which here, equates to a lot of money. My parents had to pay four silver bars to get on the boat. The boat ride was risky because some of my dad's relatives paid a Lao fisherman, and when he took them to the middle of the river, the fisherman dumped them in the water after stealing their belongings. There were lots of stories like this. A lot of people who tried to cross the river died because of boats tipping over, drowning, or being shot by patrolling soldiers. Many people were killed and tossed in the river like nothing.

Luckily, my parents and the rest of the group didn't get tipped over. They made it safely to the other side. My mom and everyone else waited on the banks of the river while my dad tried to talk to the mayor or leader of the area to sign my parents' papers. These papers stated that you were refugees from the war. They help you travel easier and prevent you from being sent back to Laos. The mayor was furious and screamed at my dad to go back and not come into Thailand. My dad stormed out and told my mom and the rest to go.

As they were walking along the road, a big army truck came by and stopped in front of them. A short, stubby man came out of the passenger side and grabbed my dad by the arm. He asked my dad if my dad was Hmong and then the man told my dad that just yesterday, some Thai officers caught some Hmong people and sent them back to Laos after taking all their money and goods.

My dad and everyone else were lucky to have met these guys. They loaded everyone into the back of the truck and went straight to the base. There were Thai officers searching everywhere for my parents like crazy! The Hmong-Thai officer hid my parents and the group in the bathroom for the whole day. My mom told me they were so thirsty they drank the water that was used to wash urine and feces.

Outside the safety of the bathroom, the Thai officers were circling and going back and forth in the area of the Hmong-Thai base. When night came, the Hmong-Thai soldiers loaded my parents and everyone else back into the truck and took them to a refugee camp called Ban Vinai.

When they arrived, the mayor or leader told my parents this place was nicer and simply asked if my parents had any relatives that were already living in Ban Vinai. My dad's uncle was living there, so he took in my dad and everyone else.

My parents stayed with my dad's uncles from June 1983 until March 1985. They stayed for about two years, but Ban Vinai was no longer registering people to come to America, so my parents moved to another camp. My dad registered the family to come to America. The two requirements were: not wanting to stay in Laos or Thailand and you had to know where you wanted to go in America. My parents got on the plane to San Diego, CA. My parents were happy to be heading towards freedom, but sad too because they left their friends, their family, their homes. My parents cried, knowing they may never see them again. But they knew at least they were going to a place where they were loved, wanted and appreciated. After all their struggles, they were finally going to a land of freedom, of opportunities, and privileges.

The story of my parents' journey to the U.S. inspires me to do my best in life and everyday things. They worked hard, sacrificed so much, just for a better life for my siblings and I. Their story reminds me of how important my success in the future will be, and that inspires me to work hard to achieve it.
